Introduction

In this making and declining invitations game, students are invited to do various things and must try to decline each invitation with a unique excuse.

Procedure

Begin by eliciting language for making and declining invitations from the class and write it on the board:

Would you like to...?

Do you want to...?

How about...?

I'd like to invite you to...

I'd love to, but I...

I'm sorry, but I have to...

Thanks, but I...

I'm sorry, I can't. I'm going...

Next, review the language by inviting students to do things using the phrases on the board and have them decline your invitations and give excuses.

Next, divide the students into groups of three or four.

Give each group a set of cards. Ask the students to shuffle the cards and place them face down in a pile on the table.

Students take it in turns to pick up a card and use the prompt on the card to invite the student on their right to do something, e.g. 'Do you want to go to the park this afternoon?'

The student on their right then tries to win the card by declining the invitation and giving an excuse, e.g. 'I'm sorry, but I have to study English this afternoon'.

If the student does this successfully, the other student gives them the card.

The students are not allowed to use the same excuse twice during the game.

If they do or they can't think of an excuse, the invitation passes to the next student on the right. This continues until a student comes up with a new reason and wins the card.

The student with the most cards at the end of the game wins.

Afterwards, have a class feedback session to find out some of the best reasons for declining an invitation.
