Introduction

In this past obligation and prohibition activity, students ask and answer questions about what they were and weren't allowed to do and had to do when they were a child. This activity can be used to practice permission, obligation and prohibition in the past.

Procedure

Divide the students into groups of up to 12.

Give one card to each student.

Explain that each student is responsible for finding the answer to the question on their card by speaking to everybody in the group.

Have the students prepare the question they need to ask and review each one, e.g. 'Were you allowed to watch TV at night when you were a child?'

The students then go around their group finding out about what their classmates were and weren't allowed to do and had to do when they were a child by asking questions with 'Were you allowed to...?' or 'Did you have to...?'

Students put a tick or cross on the back of the card each time a classmate answers yes or no.

When everyone has finished, the students sit down in their groups and take it in turns to talk about the information they found out.

Each student writes about the group's findings.

Example:

In our group, nobody was allowed to buy their own clothes. Most people weren't allowed to go out with their friends in the evening, but Darren and Tony were allowed to sometimes, etc.

When everyone has finished, the groups take it in turns to report back to the class on what they found out during the activity.
